MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE - 1970

The structure of decision-making at the College has been opened broadly so that students who are interested can make their voices heard at all levels from committee meetings to the Board of Trustees. In the previous year, student voting members on various faculty committees and student participation in faculty meetings were initiated and regarded as very useful — if occasionally time consuming. The problem at Middlebury is not lack of option for participation, it is convincing the shy or the disgruntled that their voices are necessary for the proper working of the College, and that they should make themselves heard in the many forums open to them.

Like many colleges, Middlebury went into a period of extraordinary session following the Cambodian invasion and the Kent State tragedy. Unlike many colleges, the outcome was a great renewal of the unity of the college community rather than a disruptive, divisive aftermath. After five days, regular work recommenced but in those five days, students, faculty and administration came in various ways to a better realization of why they were all together in these grey-stone buildings on a hillside in Vermont. Something very important about the persons who make up the institution and about the meaning of a college was sensed and spoken to in those days Hopefully this can be maintained in the days ahead. The challenge to everyone, especially to those just entering the College, is to keep fresh this sense of community without the rush of crisis. A community which can only know itself in crisis, cannot he an ideal base for an educational institution. Middlebury has been fortunate in many ways in not losing a sense of community and the difficult days in May only accentuated and drew on that permanent sense of community. Perhaps it is this sense of a community which is the best gift the College can give to its incoming students and the one that they should take greatest care to preserve and perfect.

The class of 1974 enters Middlebury College at the conclusion of a great building cycle in the history of the institution They will be the first class to have full utilization in their academic careers of the Christian A. Johnson Building for Music and Art, the Science Center, and the new Student Society Buildings which are unique in combining dining, social and academic life under a single (ultra-modern) roof. For a change only one building will be under construction, a new dormitory on Pearson's hill which will be used to complete the planned expansion of the College to 1800 students in the Fall of 1971.

If the architects and contractors take a temporary rest — and it is only temporary for the needs of the late 70's and early 80's are already being discussed — attention will turn to the workings of these facilities and the program of the College 1970-71 ap-
